Professor Peter McElevy

Year of Call: 1999

Practice Overview

A leading expert on family aspects of private international law, Peter is Professor of International Family Law at the University of Dundee and a visiting professor at the University of Kobe in Japan. His research has been relied upon by leading courts globally, and in recent years has regularly been cited in proceedings of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Peter McElevy advises and gives expert evidence, domestically and internationally, on all aspects of international family law, especially in cases of international child abduction, jurisdiction disputes and public law children cases, which have a cross border element.

Peter also has a particular interest in connecting factors, and provides expert opinions on the interpretation of both habitual residence and domicile.

Peter has frequently been called upon to advise on contentious aspects of law reform: the Europeanisation of child abduction rules (Lord Chancellor's Department, 2002); the implementation of the 1996 Hague Convention on the Protection of Children (Ministry of Justice, 2009/10, 2012); and the introduction of same-sex marriage (Dicey, Morris & Collins on the Conflict of Laws)
